

Basin Pond

Basin Pond's trails lead visitors across streams and cascades through a boulder-strewn natural amphitheater to a beaver pond and the site of two long-gone man-made dams. Hikers today can enjoy Basin Pond's 296 acres by taking the loop trail or walking the more direct route to the pond via the lower trail.

BASIN POND TRAIL MAP

Trail Description:

Trail: 2.5 miles, roundtrip

Difficulty: Moderate (uneven footing, elevation changes)

From the kiosk, the trail takes hikers on an easy ramble over rolling ground. Just after the stream, the trail splits. The right fork rises higher on the slope while the left fork takes a shorter route with less elevation gain. The two trails converge at a short spur leading to what remains of the 1965 dam. A viewing platform there offers a safe perspective on those ruins and the pond that beavers have created.

Natural History:

Basin Pond's watery habitat attracts moose and beaver, in part because the property abuts the 16,500 acres of October Mountain State Forest, the largest state forest in MA. Much other wildlife can be seen, including hermit thrushes. Hemlocks, oaks and other hardwood trees provide abundant shade, while hobblebush is common in the undergrowth. A striking feature of the site is the lacework of streams, large and small, that course down the south-facing hillside.
